New databases added—Bloom's Literature and Polling the Nations

By Chelsea Post

Two new databases were added to the library's collection, just in time for finals: Bloom's Literature and Polling the Nations, both from Infobase Publishers.

Bloom's Literature holds information about a variety of authors, literature, writing and other related topics. Easily search by author, title or even time period in order to find relevant sources, from primary documents to video clips. There is also an entire section dedicated to Shakespeare's collected works, as well as tools for writing literary topics and avoiding plagiarism.

Polling the Nations is perfect for those in the political science major, or just those looking for statistical information on current topics. The homepage hosts graphs on up-to-date issues, but the database can be searched by topic, location or media source, in order to find specific information. Built-in citation tools make citing graphical information easy, and you can share the images with fellow students to use in presentations.

Both databases can be found on our library's Databases page.
